Let there be no more Peabody horrors!

It is reassuring that Montpelier's leading musical organization refuses to be engulfed by any high C's.

The loss of the United States submarine F-4 has been traced down to a tiny leak through a loose rivet. Which finding emphasizes the value of frequent and thorough inspection of vessels which go down to the sea for their work.

THE PEABODY SCHOOL FIRE.

Although a score of little lives were lost in the partial destruction of a parochial school building at Peabody, Mass., notwithstanding the fact that fire drills had been customary, there should be no lessened confidence in the efficacy of the fire drill. There should be, instead, increased conviction that the fire drill is a tremendous aid in saving human life in such a huddled mass of humanity as can be found in the average school or factory building. And, based on that conviction, there should be renewed efforts on every hand to take full advantage of such a method of vacating a building by making the occupants of the given buildings so accustomed to the drill that the process will work like well-oiled machinery. To be sure, the element of human fear has always to be reckoned with; there always is a possibility that the tension of each individual will snap under the strain and the stress of the emergency. That must be borne in mind at all times. But there should be effort so to train the inmates of a building that they will all maintain an even mental poise under stress and the trying time of a fire. We are informed that in the terrible occurrence at Peabody the 16 women who were in charge of the parochial school had the fire drill working fairly well in the actual emergency and the 600 children were making progress toward the open air and safety when, sad to relate, the tension in some little mind snapped under the great strain and the cry of abject fear resulting therefrom was communicated to the minds of the other little ones like wildfire and then—well, then there was little else to do than to remove bodies after the flames themselves had been sufficiently conquered. Crazed by fear, the youngsters darted madly from the precise line of the accustomed fire drill and ran pell-mell for the nearest exit, the result being that the little bodies were piled in such a great heap that the exit was blocked quite effectually. But still the fire drill was not by any means a complete failure, for while a score of lives were lost hundreds were saved, albeit many of them were injured. So do not condemn the fire drill as an emergency measure. Rather use it and use it so frequently that the idea shall become instilled in the minds of the endangered people that complete safety lies only in rigid adherence to the principle involved—the orderly exit in a rapid-moving single file. There is nothing else to take the place of the fire drill. Therefore, stick to it.

The Shoe that Hides the Bunion

THE SOLACE $4.00

The Solace boot is almost certain relief for tired feet, cramped toes, enlarged joints. It's much more roomy than usual over the ball of the foot, but retains the narrow heel, and is so cleverly designed that it doesn't look wide.

It fits without a wrinkle over the instep, and has ample toe-room. It comes in comfortably soft dull kid leathers at $4.00.
